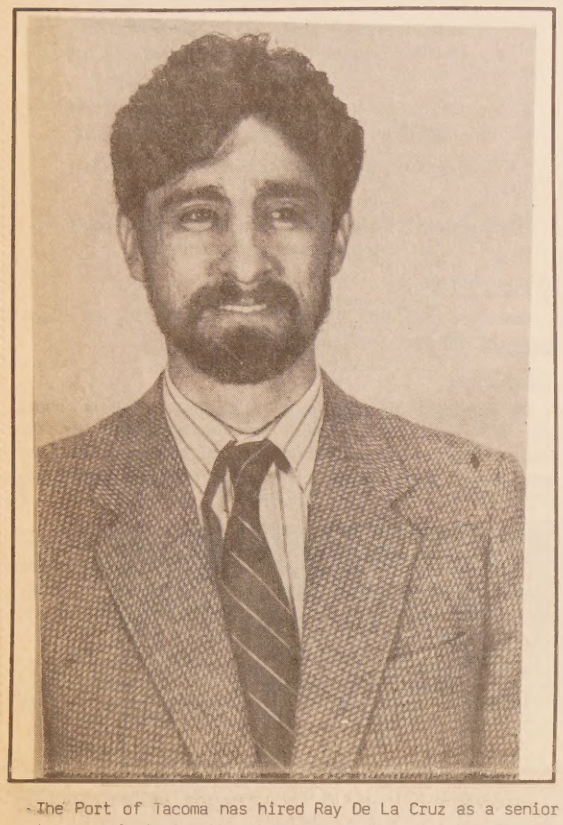
Tacoma Port Hires Senior Systems Analyst.



The Port of Tacoma has hired Ray De La Cruz as a senior systems analyst in its data processing department. The 35-year old De La Cruz will work on designing, implementing, developing, and evaluating automated systems at the Port. These include a modern system for tracking container traffic through Port terminals, which was installed in 1983.

De La Cruz comes to the Port after working six years at Weyerhaeuser, where he was most recently a project leader, implementing systems for the shipping container division. His additional past experience includes working as a programmer/analyst for Academic Financial Services in California, Century National Insurance, and Wadesco Services Company. He received his certificate in programming technology from the Control Data Institute in Los Angeles in 1974.

Military Options Held In Reserve

Reagan Administration officials said that they were holding in reserve several military options in response to the hijacking of the Trans World Airlines plane. The options include a bombing strike against the Beirut airport, attacks on terrorist training camps and the use of agents to track down the hijackers.

But officials said the prevailing desire was to try diplomatic moves first. The officials said one factor inhibiting a military reprisal against Shiite extremists believed to be behind the hijacking was the possible risk to seven missing Americans, at least six whom are believed held by extremists in lebanon.

"Obviously, you don't want to get seven people killed," a State Department official said. Officials also said that although they believed they knew the identities of the two men who hijacked the T.W.A. plane June 14, they did not know which hijacker killed one of the passengers, Robert Dean Stethem, a Navy diver.

"The man who pulled the trigger, as of now, we don't know," a State Department official said.

Administration officials said they hoped to learn details about the hijackers, possibly including the identity of the killer by debriefing the 39 passengers and crew members freed Sunday.

The official said lawyers at the Central Intelligence Agency had been asked to study the legal restraints that would apply to American agents if President Reagan ordered a manhunt.

For example, the officials said, the agency's lawyers have been asked whether a Presidential order forbidding assasination would also apply to the use of deadly force in merely trying to seize the hijackers.

An official said, "We want Stethem's killers brought to justice." But he added that the United States hoped to accomplish this through the lebanese Government. In describing the measures announced today to close the Beirut airport, a State Department official said they were "the beginnng of a campaign" against terrorism. But when asked about the possibility of bombing the airport, he said: "No comment. I am not going to speculate."

Another official said the unless that sanctions were accompanied by destruction of runways, terrorists would be able to land at the airport.

Hostages

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) - Thirty former hostages of TWA Flight 847 returned home, welcomed by President Reagan with the vow that "there will be no forgetting" that one of their number was killed and seven other Americans remain imprisoned in Lebanon.

The freed Americans, who had been held hostage in Beirut with nine others for 17 days, arrived at Andrews Air Force Base aboard a special TWA flight from Frankfurt, West Germany.

They stepped onto the same tarmac which only 13 days earlier had received the body of Robert Dean Stethem, the Navy diver from Waldorf, Md., who was the sole person slain by the hijackers among 153 people on the flight.

Stethem's death, and the fact that seven Americans kidnapped since March, 1984, are still held hostage in Lebanon muted the joy of the homecoming. Reagan spent a few private minutes aboard the aircraft with the former hostages, telling them, according to spokesman Larry Speakes that he had just laid flowers at Stethem's grave. "This is the one sad note today, and there are seven other sad notes - and we are going to continue to work on that," Speakes quoted the president as saying.

In brief public remarks to the released Americans and their families, Reagan declared, "There is only one thing to say, and I say it from the bottom of my heart and for all the people in the country: Welcome home."

Peter Hill, 57, also said the Shiite Amal militia that held the group at various houses in Beirut tried to indoctrinate their hostages with videotapes, lectures, and late-night debates.

At least three other freed hostages also voiced anger at their captors today, with one saying in a television interview that the American public had been "duped" by the terrorists.

Asked about the praise some of his fellow hostages had for their Amal captors, Hill said: "some people were sucked in." "I do not go along with all this crap about their religious fervor," he added.

A tour operator from the Chicago suburb of Hoffman Estates who has traveled extensively in the Middle East, Hill said the hijackers had "broken the rules" of their own reigion.

"They broke every rule in the (Koran)," he said. "They could never justify that to me, no matter how hard they tried and I let them know it."

Justice Will Prevail Chief Satiacum Own Story.

Chief Bob Satiacum

First and foremost I must make the statement that everything that has happened to me is connected with the Medicine Creek Treaty of 1854. I cannot be judged by my peers, which is the basic percept of Canadian jurisprudence, because no one who hears my statement or reads it will be knowledgeable in the area of Indian Treaties or aboriginal rights, or even Indian Law as it pertains to the United States of America.

As Chief of Chiefs of All Nations amongst my people, a title that is similar to that of a monarch among your societies, the very least I can request is that some of my fellow Chiefs here be placed on the refugee committee that will review my case in Ottawa. Some of the names I wish to put forward are: Chief Robert Manuel of the Nescainlith, and former president of the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs; Harold Cardinal, a stateman of our people, who is from Alberta; Chief Sol Sanderson of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians; Chief Ernie Daniels, Chairman of the Dakota-Ojibway Tribal Council of Manitoba; Wallace Labillois, Chairman of the Council of Elders of the Assembly of First Nations; and Harry Daniels, Vice-President of the Native Council of Canada.

This is, of course, in addition to representatives of Amnesty International and the United Nations Human Rights Commission who are in a position to assess the situation of Indian leaders with in the United States of America.

So to begin with, I must give you a background of my struggle to make the United States and the State of Washington in particular honour our Treaty. And then to explain to you how the FBI and other law enforcement agencies acted as the modern day "Calvary" to eliminate me as an Indian activist. I am here today because the United States Government, in conjunction with its law enforcement agencies, engaged in a concerted conspiracy, based on unscrupulous principles, in order to criminalize me. Through the use of unsavory witnesses, in a shoddy mock trial, the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Internal Revenue Servie (IRS) criminalized me to end my thirty-five year struggle to preserve fundamental inherant rights accorded to my people by birth, bargain and Treaty.

In the tradition of the U.S. Calvary assaults upon my people during the conquest of the west, the U.S. government, without conscience or honor, has added another chapter to its shameless record of repudiation of Indian Treaty rights by manufacturing evidence and manipulating the justice system to convict Indian activists who fight to protect their Treaty rights. I stand before you as one of their victims.

In 1981, Amnesty International, a renowned international human rights organization and Nobel Peace Prize winner for its work on behalf of political prisoners around the world, in a 144 page document, proposed an independent inquiry into FBI activities of midconduct in manipulating the U.S. justice system to criminalize U.S. political dissidents. This document, put forth by a highly respected international agency, will substantiate my accusations of gross improprieties on the part of U.S. law enforcement agencies against my people.

I will not reiterate the past shameful history of U.S. conduct in relation to my people. That is already on record. But in order that charges of persecution by the United States government against me can be understood, I will relate my personal history, which is the basis for the U.S. government's attack against me and it will explain why my persecution was politically motivated.

I am a descendent of the great Chiefs of the Yakima and Puyallup Tribes, from whom I inherit my Chieftainship. We are part of the great Salish Nation which extends from Oregon up into the interior of British Columbia. As a young teenager, I was constantly reminded by my grandmother and our elders that I was an hereditary Chief and had a responsibility to my people.

Our people had been scattered. There was no Tribal land left in the late forties, except 6 acres of burial ground. The Medicine Creek Treaty, signed in 1854, was the first Treaty signed in the Northwest. It set aside land for the Puyallup Tribe, including the whole area surrounding Kuminsulat Bay of the Tacoma area. But the Tribe only received half of that area, which was gradually lost to the Tribe by sale and expropriation for the Port of Tacoma.

Over the years there was a need for a deep-sea port, so they took most of our reservation land through Congressional Acts. this is how most of the reservation land was stolen

AND Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of the Lord, and the wall of Jerusalem round about.

Only the people sacrificed in high places, because there was no house built unto the name of the Lord, until those days.

And Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father: only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places.

And the king went to Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high place: a thousand burnt offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night: and God said, Ask what I shall give thee.

And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto thy servant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou has given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

And now, O Lord my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in.

And thy servant is in the midst of Thy people whom thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing.

And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment;

Behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honour: so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days.

And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream. And he came to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and offered up burnt offerings, and offered peace offerings, and made a feast to all his servants.

Then came two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and stood before him.

And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house.

And this woman's child died in the night; because she overlaid it.

CALENDAR OF EVENTS

Buckle Up For Safety.

If you're traveling over the Fourth of July weekend, be sure to buckle up. It's always a smart move, whether you're going across town or across the state.

Dr. Warren Appelton, chairman of the Washington State Safety Restraint Coalition, says that with more people on the highways in search of a good time, the toll from highway accidents is likely to be high.

But it doesn't have to be that way. Dr. Appleton and the Safety Restraint Coalition are issuing a challenge to the people of this state over the Fourth of July: Every time you get in your car, buckle up. For those of you who already buckle up, keep up the good work!

As Holm recalls, "There was no music. Just nothing. I began to pray about it and I said, 'Well Lord, if Your wer singing, what would You say?' In about five or ten minutes the words, the music, everything was there. I just wrote it out. When it was done, I sat back and looked at it and realized that it hadn't come out of my head. I've ofter said that God wrote the song and I've just delivered the message."

"Rise Again" was number one for many months and stayed on one music chart for 52 consecutive months. This song in now considered a classic within the gospel music industry.

Communication Guidelined- From 1st Corinthians 13: 4-7

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;

LOVE IS PATIENT

Sometimes desired results take awhile. Do not expect overnight solutions or changes.

LOVE IS KIND

Be sensitive to each other's feelings. Try to handle your differences in a gentle way. Maximize the favorable accomplishments and minimize the irritations. Give your mate credit for what he or she has done to please you. Be liberal with your encouragement.

LOVE IS NOT JEALOUS

Be sure that the disagreement is based upon legitimate claims. Jealousy should be recognized and eliminated before the problem is aired. Jealousy is a threat and a hindrance to valid discussions.

LOVE DOES NOT BRAG AND IS NOT ARROGANT

Allow your parther a chance to present his or her side. Aim for a two-way conservation.

LOVE DOES NOT ACT UNBECOMINGLY

Be poised and remain calm. Do not resort to vulgar language or name-calling. Nothing is accomplished by deliberately needling or hurting the other person.

LOVE DOES NOT SEEK ITS OWN

Above all, do not argue to win. A healthy discussion seeks only to expose and to deal with the issue. Compromise is an excellent method of dealing with stubborn situations.

LOVE IS NOT PROVOKED

Listen attentively. Stay alert for any negative emotions from within yourself. Anger, hurt and self-pity are unreliable and cause extensive damage.

LOVE DOES NOT TAKE INTO ACCOUNT A WRONG SUFFERED

Do not lie in order to make or to win a point. Be faithful with the facts, even if they are incriminating. Always state your feelings honestly. Honesty promises the best results.

LOVE BEARS ALL THINGS, BELIEVES ALL THINGS, HOPES ALL THINGS, ENDURES ALL THINGS

Remember and observe the above scriptural exhortation: be strong, trust, keep your faith in God and your spouse, and be willing to wait for the victory. Let go of the disagreement before bedtime. Do not struggle into the wee hours of the morning. Both of you need your rest. Resume the discusion, if you must, when both or you are rested and have had the opportunity to consider all that has been said.

SEATTLE, WA -- This summer, museum goers can relive the heroic days on the homefront during World War II in a major interpretive exhibit opening July 4, 1985 at the Museum of History and Industry (MOHAI) in Seattle. "Life on the Homefront: World War II in Seattle and King County" brings the city to life as it was during the War Years 1941-45.

The exhibit tackles the important issues of minority and race relations, and examines the post-war changes brought on by this historically significant period. Much of this is achieved through vivid images from the Museum's photography collection, and through sensitive quotations compiled from an eight-month oral history project in which local residents shared their homefront memories.

from our Tribe. Attorneys for the City of Tacoma were attempting to administer the final blow to our helpless people by urging the courts to declare the paltry remnants of our reservation non-existent and our Tribe terminated. I was eventually able to thwart the aspirations of the City of Tacoma because the Federal Government still held Tribal money and the few acres of cemetary land in trust, thereby constituting our Tribe as a legal entity.

Our Tribal Council was still in existence, but only met to discuss filing land claims in the courts to gain compensation for land stolen from us. In those days I did not feel like a Chief, nevertheless I attended Tribal Council meetings where I learned about our Medicine Creek Treaty and the repudiation of our Treaty rights by the United States Government.

It was during those discussions in the Tribal Council that I began to gain interest in our rights, and during the course of this time, I had many conversations with the Tribal Council attorney, Malcom McLeod.

When I complained that we no longer had our Treaty rights to hunt and fish, he said, "You still have tose rights because the Treaty is the Supreme Law of the land." He also told me the only reason the state did not recognize our fishing and hunting rights was because our people had given up exercising them. He told me somebody had to get out and start fishing and hunting or those rights were not worth anything.

I was a young man, fresh out of high school. I didn't know what the "Supreme Law of the land" meant. It sounded powerful. It took a lot of explaining to me that it was the same as the Constitution fo the United States. McLeod told me that it was superior to any law that the individual State had. It is easy to say the State is bound by the Treaty, but those guys with the badges and guns think otherwise.

As far as the State of Washington was concerned, those rights did not exist. Puyallup Indian people could not fish. So this is where I started fighting in 1948. This is when the bitter, hand-to-hand, life-threatening combat began...on our river and its shores. And that battle carried on for twenty-seven years.

The state fishery officers would tell me to get the hell off the river and if they ever caught me there again, they would arrest me. I would go to my attorney's office and he would assure me that it was my right as an Indian to fish. "The Medicine Creeek Treaty is the Supreme Law of the land," he would say again and again.

So I would go back and fish on the river again, and again the fisheries officer would threaten me. They were trying to intimidate me. This scene carried on through 1948 until the summer of 1949 when the officers denied us our right to fish with brute force and arrests.

My brother Buddy and another Indian by the name of James Young were along with me. The State had powerful motor boats and we were fishing in dug-out canoes. One night in the summer of 1949 we had just placed our nets out when a couple of fisheries officer came down to tell us they were going to arrest us and take us to jail.

I asked what the charges would be. The two officers left and consulted with their superior. When they returned, they gave us a citation. That was the first case the Puyallups had in court concerning our Treaty rights to fish.

The case carried on to 1950 when we lost in Justice of the Peace court. Then we appealed. A jury trial in 1954 found us not guilty. this gave recognition to our Tribe and Treaty. Then the State appealed the decision, thereby upholding the jury's decision.

Through all the years before the decision, we kept fishing in spite of the harrassment, criminal charges and brutality exerted against us. Even though we were continually arrested and our fishing boats and equipment were confiscated, we never stopped exercising our fishing rights. I felt that if you are going to stick your neck out, you have got to keep it there and continue to fight.

Real Estate Trainer Brings Innovative Techniques To Tacoma.

Barb Schwarz from Bellevue, Washington will bring her creative and innovative techniques for listing residential real estate to Tacoma on July 11th when she presents her all day seminar at the Fife Executive Inn from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Barb has been a consistent million dollar producer in the real estate market for over nine years and she is finally willing to share her secrets that have brought her over $6 million worth of residential sales per year for several years. Some of the techniques she will teach include: 15 steps to marketing; how to get the seller's total cooperation and commitment; handling each seller objection; getting sellers to willingly prepare their homes for marketing and in a saleable condition; using other agents to sell listings; and how to turn down overpriced but leave the seller loving the agent.

This seminar is full of information and creative new marketing methods never before taught anywhere. Investment is $40.00 per person, $35.00 each in groups in 5 or more. For more information or registration please call 285-1512.

I S A I A H 65

I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name.

I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick;

Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels;

Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

Behold, it is written before me: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the Lord, which have burned incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

We welcome news of your church and civic events.

This Time Its Freedom

Dallas, Texas is lucky for Black people.

In 1954, the NAACP held its 45th annual meeting in Dallas to celebrate the decision of May 17 by the U.S. Supreme Court that outlawed segregation in public schools. The NAACP's lawyers had scored a historic victory.

After 31 years and civil rights an accepted, albeit often challenged guarantee, the NAACP went back to Dallas. This year, unlike 1954, the delegates could stay in the "White" hotels and eat anywhere their money would permit.

Just by following contemporary events, one can understand that our civil rights has advanced tremendously, but our ability to enjoy them remains seriously impaired. And htis year's NAACP national convention brought itself squarely into the 20th Century by acknowledging that fact.

William Gibson, the NAACP's new board chairman, told the delegates that Black can help correct their own condition with a plan of action. His solution: "the ballot and the buck."

Blacks, he told his audience, must learn to use their money prudently and wisely, saving and investing in their own communities and businesses.

The only improvement that could be made on that statement would be placing the "buck" before the "ballot" This new tenor of economic development was met by wild enthusiasm and was also the theme of Ben Hooks, the executive director of the association, in the convention's inaugural keynote.

The 10,000 delegates and visitors heard Hooks' stirring and eloquent announcement of the second phase of the civil rights movement -- developing economic opportunities for Blacks. Moreover, the association has already moved in that direction.

In the past two years, the NAACP's Operation Fair Share program has gotten pledges from 29 corporations, totaling millions of dollars worth of business to Black-owned firms.

Fred Rasheed, director of economic development of the NAACP, pointed out that Blacks put billions of dollars ($170 billion, to be exact) into the economy. "What we're asking is for the economy to give us the opportunity to earn these dollars back so we can develop our own businesses and institutions."

The NAACP is underscoring what anyone with a little common sense can see. The civil rights struggles of the 60s has evolved into the struggle for equal opportunity in the marketplace in the 80s.

The freedom struggle, America's longest struggle for human dignity, has moved from the streets to the suites.

For those who have become professional critics of what the NAACP is not doing for you, the ball is now in your court. And if you spend your money with everybody but Black people, it is you who is out of touch with Black people.

By addressing economic development as our new priority, the NAACP has given every Black person a role in this drive for equality. Most Blacks, I'm convinced, don't want one -- which is why we are not equal.

But for those of us who do, join hands and pocketbooks and import prosperity, jobs and businesses into our community by spending with one another.

"The economic arena is where the game is being played now. That's where the jobs are, and that's where the contracts are, that's where the power is," Gibson said.

I estimate that about one million of us understand what that statement means and about an equal number are ready to do something about it. I call them "the talented one million."

This rebirth of consciousness is an evolution of the concept of freedom -- from civil rights to equal rights.

Finally, we're on the road to freedom. And, as usual, the NAACP is out in front.

Act On Housing Bias

Housing is one of the remaining areas in which discrimination is rampant and in which federal efforts to combat it are virtually non-existent. That's why it is important for the Congress to approve an important new initiative.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development wants a small part of its budget to go to private fair housing groups for testing programs. But Congress is resisting the idea and national realtor groups are putting on a massive campaign against it.

Testing is a long-established method of determining whether housing discrimination is taking place, and who is doing it. It's simple but effective.

Typically, it works like this: if a Black applicant for housing is turned down, a white person with similar credentials is sent to apply for the unit. If the white person is accepted, then it's pretty obvious racial discrimination is at work.

It is common for Blacks to be told that an apartment or home has already been sold or rented, and then for the white "checker" to be offered the housing unit.

In 1978, the tenth anniversity of the passage of the Fiar Housing Act -- some 4,000 "tests" were conducted in 40 metropolitan areas. Teams of white and black couples with similar financial backgrounds were sent to pose as homebuyers or apartment renters.

The results were sent for analysis to HUD, which found that black families had a 72% chance of encountering discrimination when seeking rental units. HUD also found that the chances for discrimination in housing purchases was about 50%, or one in two.

Even that intolerably high figure was understated, since steering blacks to housing in predominately black areas was not counted as discriminatory, even though it is a powerful tool in maintaining housing segregation.

All across the country, fair housing groups can document the often blatant ways in which blacks are denied free and open choice in housing.

While the media plays up the large movement of black families into the suburbs, it ignores the fact that much of it is to established black enclaves in "inner" suburbs and does not really represent the kind of major desegregation of housing we might expect 17 years after passage of a national fair housing law.

Local fair housing ordinances are also being flouted at will. Courts regularly rule in favor of fair housing groups, but the discriminators usually escape punishment. realtors and home-sellers break the law by discriminating against black home-seekers without fear of punishment, and the law itself is held in contempt.

And if there's a national law against housing discrimination, it should be the federal government that enforces it, advertises its provisions, and aggressively moves to create free and open housing choices.

One place to begin that process is to approve authority for HUD to back testing on a sustained, national basis.

A second step would be to amend the Fair Housing Act with tough penalties so that it has the force of law, and is no longer regarded as just words by those who wish to ignore it. Shamefully, Congress has failed to approve amendments that would allow the Act to be enforce.

The government has been too sensitive to the feelings of the discriminators and not sensitive enough to the victims of discrimination.

Hijacking Illuminates Western Double Standard

What I do to you doesn't matter. What you do te me, or attempt to do to me, is all that counts.

In the event I recognize I am doing you wrong, and decide to change my ways, the time-table for making amends is up to me. Anything you do to me to accelerate this change is unthinkable, and will not be tolerated.

I am certain the above two paragraphs sound familiar. They should. They sum up the philosophy the western white world has adopted in dealing with the rest of humanity.

It is this kind of thinking which makes the American and Israeli governments unable to objectively assess the factors surrounding the hijacking of TWA flight 847, and the seizure and holding of the American passengers. It is this kind of thinking that makes them go to such ludicrous lengths to keep from linking the American hostages to the more than 700 Shiite Muslims held by Israel in defiance of international law; that keeps them from admitting that a hostage is a hostage whether hijacked on the highways or skyjacked in the airways.

An example of the muddled thinking on the "linkage" question was indicated by a performance of Henry Kissinger on a national television show the day after the hijacking. Kissinger attempted to separate the United States from Israel by saying the United States was not a party to "detaining" the Shiites, and if the Muslims had a problem it should be worked out with Israel.

However, in the next breath, Kissinger tied Israeli policy to the United States by saying that if our of "generosity" Israel intended to release all of its hostages before the plane hijacking, it could not do so now "without bowing to terrorism."

I was the kind of thinking summed up in the beginning paragraphs of this column which prompted President Reagan's response to one of the few non-hijacking questions asked during his nationally-televised press conference a few days after the incident. The question, by a Black representative of Sheridan Broadcasting, dealt with the United States' position on the steadily increasing reign of terror by the white minority government against Blacks in South Africa. In his reply, Reagan stumbled and fumbled before coming out with the conclusion that Blacks are somehow "inviting" the attacks because they are "confronting" the white "authorities."

In my opinion, it was because Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. understood so well this superiority complex in white Americans, North and South, that he adopted his non-violence approach in fighting to end legal segregation in this country. He knew that this "turn of the cheek" approach would so appeal to the hypocritical sense of fairness and the paternalistic instincts of white Americans that they would gradually relent to his appeal to be more compassionate.

The irony, and the tragedy of Israel is that though it was created as a Jewish haven form European racial and religious persecution, it has itself become the cutting edge of a similar racism in the Middle East and some parts of Africa. I know that the position of Israel, in the heartland of the Arabs is extremely difficult, but it seems to me that it must struggle to fashion a role nobler than the one it is currently playing.

As Black Americans in this country we too are confronted with difficult situations and choices. Yet, we must never adopt the double standard of worth and guilt demonstrated by the present hostage crisis. If we are not afraid to follow our conscience today and speak the truth, we might yet become the salvation of this country.

Income And Safety The Right Utility Stock

CAN PROVIDE BOTH
BY Mary Agnew
Shearson Lehman Brothers, Inc.
Tacoma Financial Center
1145 Broadway Plaza
Suite 8009
Tacoma, WA 98402

One of the most difficult decisions you regualarly have to make as an investor is whether to put money into a stock that yields more-than-average incomne and is also more risky, or to go with the lower yield and somewhat safer investment.

For years, the stocks of local electric utility companies have given investors the best of both worlds by providing relatively high income and relatively low risk. More recently, though, huge cost overruns on some nuclear power plants and uncertain energy prices and supplies have raised new questions about the risks of these stocks.

In fact, you can still find many low-risk utility stocks that will provide a flow of dividend income higher than that of most common stocks. Some utility issues offer the prospect of capital gains. Which type you choose will, of course, depend on your particular investment needs.

If you primarily want current income, ask your Financial consltant about income utility stocks. These are likely to e issues of companies in areas where population and industrial growth are fairly stable. Because these utilities do not have to spend much to increase their generating capacity, they often are able to pay higher dividends. Current yields on some of these stocks are around 10%.

If you're willing to sacrifice some income now for the prospect of future capital gains, ask your Financial Consultant to identify growth utility stocks for you. These are likely to be companies serving areas where popu and industrial growth are above the national average, such as parts of the Southwest.

Since these utilities need cash to build more capacity, they pay somewhat lower dividends; the current yield for such stocks is about 7½% to 8½%. But, as their capacity increases, so should their earnings per share, which could result in significant capital appreciation for an investor.

After deciding which type of utility stock -- income or growth -- is best for you, work with your Financial Consultant to make sure you understand the risk factors on a specific issue .

The questions to ask:

* How is the stock rated? The standard investment rating services such as Standard & Poor's and Moody's evaluate each utility stock, as does a spcial utility rating service, Duff & Phelps. A high rating means the financial condition of the utility -- and, by implication, its dividend rate -- is regarded as sound.

* Is the utility debt-heavy? If so, it will usually have a low rating. The danger to an investor in a utility with a highter-than-average heavy debt load is that cash will not be available for dividend increases.

* What is the utility's exposure on nuclear plant construction? If the company has been operating a nuclear plant for some time without problems, the risk is far less than that of a company with an unfinished nuclear plant.

* What is the utility's fuel mix? A company that uses water (hydro) or coal as its chief power source is in a strong position. More risky, because the future price and suply are uncertain, is a company that relies heavily on natural gas or oil.

* Is the proportion of residential to industrial customers can run into problems if a local plant closes.

Investor demand for utility stocks usually picks up as interest rates fall because interest is a major expense for almost all utility companies and current high returns offered by many utilities frequently exceed money market rates. Obviously, however, these are just some of the factors you consider if you've decided that utility stocks meet some of your investment needs.

The Worthy Goals Of Tax Reform

THE WORTHY GOALS OF TAX REFORM
BY SENATOR SLADE GORTON

When President Reagan announced his tax reform proposal last month, the greeting it received was a mixture of enthusiasm and apprehension. Most Americans like the idea of tax reform in general. They are concerned, however, about how reform will affect them in particular.

Overall, most Americans - and Washingtonians - would benefit from a simpler, fairer federal tax code. Years of piecemeal changes in this code have resulted in a complex maze of deductions, credits and exemptions. That maze is about 2,000 pages long, and requires yet another 10,000 pages of Internal Revenue Service regulations to help explain it. As a result, more than half of all 1040 forms will be prepared by tax specialists this year, at a cost of billions of dollars to taxpayers.

While this complexity makes filling out tax forms difficult and confusing, it also results in an unfair distribution of the federal tax burden. Thus, different people and businesseswho earn about the same income may pay widely varying tax bills. That's unfair.

The costs of complexity are felt in both the federal and the consumer pocketbook. Hundreds of deductions, credits and exemptions - collectively known as "loopholes" - will cost the government nearly $365 billion in lost revenues this year. That $365 billion is made up by higher tax rates.

Furthermore, higher rates mean more taxpayers try to lower their tax bills by taking advantage of as many loopholes as possible. In fact, under the current system, people are making decisions according to how much they can save in taxes rather than on the real economic results of tose decisions.

Some deductions, however, are widely-used and actually encourage sound investment decisions. The home mortage interest deduction, for example, will almost certainly be retained in a final tax reform package.

Encouraging economic growth, then, is as important to tax reform as simplicity and fairness. Each of the major tax reform proposals before Congress makes strides towards these goals. They reduce the number of tax brackets, eliminate or curtail many of the deductions and credits in the current system, and shift the tax burden away from those at or near the poverty line.

Under President Reagan's proposal, the average individual tax bill would decrease by about 7 percent. The amount of taxes paid by the lowest three income categories would e reduced by as much as 18 percent.

On the other hand, business taxes have been predicted to rise by about 9 percent under the Administration proposal. That is possible because, although corporate rates wold fall, the base of corporate income would be broader due to fewer loopholes. In favor of small business, tax rates would remain graduated under the President's proposal, so that smaller businesses would pay lower rates than bigger, more profitable businesses.

The first, bold steps have been taken in the legislative process toward reforming our complicated and tangled federal tax system. But many questions will have to be answered in the next several months, including:

-- How can we assure that reform is revenue-neutral (meaning that it neither decreases nor increases the amount of money flowing into the Treasury)? Tax reform cannot be permitted to increase our federal deficits.

-- How can we assure than no one - whether it's the family, a member of the middle class, or someone just above the poverty line - is disproportionately hurt by tax reform?

How do we phase in a new tax system, so that those who have made long-term financial decisions based on current law aren't hurt?

-- How, if at all, should we tax fringe benefits, and should we continue to allow the state and local taxes deduction?

These are all difficult issues to face, and there are additional questions as well. Support for the principle of tax reform is great, but carefully sorting our the implications and consequences will be a difficult and necessary task.

Injured Workers Will Lose All Retraining Benefits, Unless They Act Quickly.

The Department of Labor and Industries is this week acting to take away the job retraining benefits from thousands of injured workers. "Last month the legislature passed the new law and this month many of the injured workers will lose their benefits, unless they act quickly, (within 15 days) to preserve their rights," says Cynthis Hillstrom of the Injured Workers Organization.

For a copy of the new law or information on how to keep the state from unfairly taking these benefits, injured workers are urged to contact the Injured Workers Organization in Seattle at 622-2920.
